I recommend you purchase the following title from The Bardwell Press:

DARWIN IN FRANCE CONTRIBUTIONS TO A THEORY OF COGNITIVE SOCIOLOGY

BY DOMINIQUE GUILLO

This book reports the findings of a sociological research project into how French people understand these evolution and creationism, which reveals that while people generally agree with "Darwinism" or "evolution" what ordinary people see as covered by these terms is very different from what scientists understand of the same concepts. This research shows that their understanding of these ideas is in reality somewhat blurred, and often linked to a form of indifference, which invites both a critical re-examination of the views developed in cognitive science and the social sciences on the relationship between science and everyday knowledge.
